

To me the AACG conference was more than I was expecting. One big thing this conference showed me is how a central idea can branch off into many things, and it also showed me just how far people are with their research. While I did struggle to understand most of the things presented, I believe that I was still able to understand what they were trying to achieve. I think the struggle was trying to understand how they were carrying out their research, as they used much higher levels of science than we were able to comprehend. Aside from all of the science the rest of the camp was very nice. The food was good and there were many fun things to do during breaks. It is a good place for highschoolers who want to learn more about modern research and for those who want to understand how to build their profession around science as they can ask questions and make connections that can help their career. To me this was a memorable experience and something that I would definitely go to again.
